

New Education Center Wakamatsu Farm

Imagine this beautiful building welcoming learners to an Outdoor Learning Campus in rural El Dorado County, California.

Construction began January 2021 on this innovative building in Placerville. When complete, it will invite people to discover 272-acre Wakamatsu Farm, which is the historic site of the first Japanese Colony in America established in 1869.

For over a decade, American River Conservancy has owned and managed landmark Wakamatsu Farm. Based on prior site use, the new Education Center will serve thousands of people every year while they experience the many natural, cultural, and agricultural resources on the property. For generations to come, this visionary building will remain a vital asset for all communities within the greater Sacramento region and far beyond, including Japan.

The Education Center is an infrastructural key for boosting local outdoor school and public programs. It also opens doors for outreach to disadvantaged communities, particularly in urban areas. The building will entice more people of all ages to benefit from time spent in nature while enjoying the unique features of the property, including trails, ponds, oak woodlands, gardens, nature play space, native plant nursery, teahouse, museum, living history, and much more.

The cutting-edge building will also be a teaching tool addressing climate change. Solar panels and a rainwater catchment system will illustrate how easy it is to harness renewable resources and conserve precious water. By demonstrating green technologies, the Education Center will inspire visitors to take these solutions to their homes, classrooms, and work places.

Supporters helped ARC raise over $311,000, which will cover Phase 1 construction costs. At the completion of Phase 1, the pavilion-style building will be functional with no electricity, water, or restrooms. Estimated Phase 2 construction costs are $220,000. Current fundraising efforts will support Phase 2 completion of the new building.
